STANDARD BRITON IS SHOCKED

American Playing Golf in Shirt
Sleeves Stirs Cry of "Outrage!"

Special Cable Dispatch to The Sun.

LONDON, June 21.—Mr. Page, the American Ambassador, was confronted this week with the question of whether or not to hold a Fourth of July reception. Irwin Laughlin, the first secretary, and other members of the embassy suggested that as Mr. Page had no house it would afford an excellent opportunity to demonstrate to Congress the necessity of passing the bill for the purchase of buildings for American embassies. Mr. Page agreed at first to this, but changed his mind after a deputation of American residents in London had called on him. Their message to the Ambassador was in effect: "Hold the reception on the grounds if necessary, but hold it otherwise you will injure yourself and your country more than you will help the bill." Mr. Page took the advice of the deputation and the reception will be held either in the ballroom of Claridge's or some other big hotel.

Standard Britons Horrified.

A shudder of horror raised goose-flesh throughout the aristocratic golf clubs of England this week when the members read of the "outrageous" conduct of an American visitor at a well-known club near London. This is described by an Englishman, who sympathizes with the American, in a letter to a newspaper couched in the following terms:

"An American entered the smoking room in his shirt sleeves preparatory to playing. There immediately arose a censorious admonitory hum from the other occupants of the room, which contained audible references to 'bad form' which ought to be stopped." The American obviously noticed these remarks, but said nothing and went on to play. He behaved perfectly, but I tremble to think what he must have been thought of by English gentlemen."

The writer proceeds to point out how an Englishman still carries abroad his own opinions, dress and everything else, and would resent a suggestion that they were not quite suitable. He continues:

"Yet when a sensible American on a holiday takes off his coat to play golf an Englishman calls it an outrage, though on this particular occasion people were playing tennis a few yards away in exactly the same costume as was objected to on the links."

Wants "Proper" Golf Garb.

The Daily Mail editorially supports the members who objected to men playing golf in their shirt sleeves even when the thermometer indicates 121 degrees in the sun, as it did this week in London and its suburbs. The paper says:

"The short sleeve is proper for lawn tennis or the cricket field, but on a golf course it looks strange and would attract as much attention as if the players were in rowing shirts."

The Daily Mail goes on to point out that it is perfectly simple to obtain vestments of gossamer fabric for the rare occasions when the temperature in England is high. A coat of such light texture could not hamper or unduly heat a player."

GAELS IN LINGUISTIC DISPUTE.

Athletic Cup's Inscription in Irish
Rouses Hilarity.

LONDON, June 12.—It is an axiom among Irish revivalists that no one really understands the Irish language except the particular revivalist who is talking to you. As such an Irish inscription appears, as it now often does on a tablet or a medal, all the revivalists who were not consulted as to its phrasing hasten to point out what deplorably bad Irish it is. A cup bearing an inscription in Irish was among those competed for at the national university sports in Dublin recently. Part of the inscription was "Carm na mban," which was meant for "The Women's Cup," but, as a revivalist, it really means "The Women's Beer." The same revivalist bore the words "Cluiche na mban na mban" as an Irish rendering of national university sports. The club now informs us that the words really mean "The University of Ireland is a game."

Court Presentations Have Little Value.

LONDON, June 10.—Apart from a certain appeal to feminine vanity, presentations at court would hardly seem to be worth the bother and expense attached to the function except for those really in the court circle. The expense of a court dress, bouquet and other items is considerable, the passage through the throne room lasts only a moment and the occasion presents no other feature of interest beyond perhaps the fact that the presenting room is given to the general company and supper downstairs.

Presentation does not entitle those so honored to any further recognition by the sovereigns, such as an invitation to a state ball, or even a garden party.

'SLEEPING MAN' FALLS TO DEATH

A. F. Mann Drops Into River During Attack of Coma.

LONDON, June 12.—Well known in the United States, Canada and Derbyshire as "the sleeping man," Arthur Fitzgerald Mann, aged 44, the son of a Dr. J. M. Mann, died recently under peculiar circumstances. The medical officer of the opinion that when sitting on the bank of the River Lifford, he was seized with one of his sleeping attacks and fell into the water. The attack, said the doctor, would produce sufficient stimulus for Mann to get out, and when he reached the bank there would be a relapse. With his clothing saturated, he remained on the bank for four or five hours before being removed to the infirmary.

Death was attributed to shock produced by cold and exposure. The man's sister, who identified the body, stated that American doctors said he was subject to attacks of coma.

Lord Murray, Involved in Marconi Inquiry

Baron Murray of Elibank, who was the chief Liberal whip for several years, was one of those involved in the deal in shares of the American Marconi Company which resulted in the gravest political scandal of years in England. When the contract between the Postmaster-General and the Marconi company for the establishment of an imperial system of wireless stations was discussed in Parliament, Chancellor Lloyd George and Attorney-General Sir Rufus Isaacs omitted to tell of their purchases of Marconi company shares and the opposition, when the facts came to light, charged the Ministers with impropriety in dealing in the shares under circumstances which gave them an advantage over the general public. After a long debate in the House of Commons the Ministers' expression of regret that they had not taken Parliamentary confidence was accepted by a vote of 246 to 254 on Thursday last.

BEDSTEAD WIRELESS RECEIVER.

London Man Finds Wire
Formas Serviceable Antenna.

LONDON, June 12.—The following letter appears in the current number of Nature:

"I find that an iron bedstead with wire mattress on the top (fourth) floor of this house answers quite well as an antenna for the receipt of wireless signals. It is only necessary to connect the receiving apparatus, which includes a Brown relay, between the bedstead and the water pipe to receive the Admiralty signals loudly and others from various unidentified stations faintly but quite audibly."

I find also that with the bedstead antenna it is possible to get the time signals from the Eiffel Tower. As might be expected, the signals are not very loud, but are sufficiently audible to be recognized and read easily.

FLOWERY PHRASES BARRED.

German Don't Like "Much Esteemed Sir" Any More.

LONDON, June 10.—Business men on the Continent are apparently becoming impatient of the elaborate phrases of courtesy with which their correspondents are adorned. Some German firms now stick on their letters an oblong blue stamp on which is printed a request to their correspondents to dis-

Mr. Balfour Explains the Word to Reporters.

LONDON, June 12.—In a recent speech at the National Society on dualism in education, Mr. Balfour used the word "dichotomize." The reporters, not having heard of this strange verb, held a consultation about it and sent up a message to Mr. Balfour, asking if their note was correct. They got in reply this piece of Balfourism: "Did I really use such a word? Was it a verb or a substitute? Make it 'bisect!'"

PICTURESQUE FIGURE MAY QUIT CHAMBER

Abbe Lemire Barred by Vatican
Order From Seeking Election.

CURES WHOOPING COUGH

Dr. Roux Tells of Discoveries
Made by Drs. Nicholle and Conon.

Special Cable Dispatch to The Sun.

PARIS, June 21.—A picturesque figure seems doomed to disappear from the French Chamber as a result of the Vatican decree that no French ecclesiastic can be a candidate for the elections without the consent of the Bishop of the district where he wishes to present himself. Abbe Lemire, whose tall cassock-clad figure always surprises foreigners on their first visit to the Chamber, is now the only priest who is a Deputy, so the decree seems to be aimed at him alone. His Bishop has already announced his opposition to the abbe being a candidate and will certainly refuse his authorization at the next election.

Abbe Lemire expressed surprise at the decree. He said:

"A similar ordinance was issued in 1906, when an exception was made in favor of Abbe Gayraud and myself on account of our acquired rights, as we were already Deputies. Abbe Gayraud is dead, but my rights still exist. I regret the possibility of being deprived of the advantages of a position which has lasted for twenty years. It seems to me so contrary to ordinary justice that I cannot believe it."

If Abbe Lemire bows to the authority of the Vatican it will be the first time since the establishment of the Parliamentary regime in France when no ecclesiastic will be a member of the Chamber of Deputies.

Cure for Whooping Cough.

Dr. Roux, director of the Pasteur Institute, described to the Academy of Sciences a cure for whooping cough, which was discovered by Drs. Nicholle and Conon of the Pasteur Institute in Tunis, during a severe epidemic of that disease. They cultivated the whooping cough bacillus, which was discovered some time ago by Dr. Bordet of the Pasteur Institute at Brussels. They injected weak doses of this culture from two to five times with an interval of forty-eight hours. Of the 122 children treated, 27 per cent. were completely cured in less than three weeks, 50 per cent. showed considerable improvement, and 23 per cent. were not affected.

The number of cases, Dr. Roux said, was too limited to make a definite pronouncement in regard to the new treatment, but he is certain that this mildly catarrhal but treated scientifically.

The success of Gustave Charpentier's opera "Moulin" may be judged from the receipts, which are officially said to have been over 10,000 francs, or $2,000, for each of the last four performances, after the 10 per cent. tax for the poor had been deducted. This means that the house has been practically full every night. Director Carre is so pleased with the result that he will give a free performance of "Moulin" on Monday in celebration of Charpentier's triumph. He has engaged M. Rousseau, the well-known opera singer, for a number of representations beginning next October.

French vital statistics for the year 1912, which were published this week, show an improvement over 1911. According to Jacques Bertillon, the improvement is, however, more apparent than real. The prolonged and intolerable heat of 1911, he says, killed many children and aged people who otherwise would have lingered until 1912, while the coolness of 1912 decreased the infantile mortality.

Births Exceed Deaths.

The birth sex exceeded the deaths in 1912 by 28,000, as compared with an excess of deaths over births in 1911 of 30,000. The number of births is, however, still below the average of the preceding five years. Before 1907 the number of births was about 1,000,000 annually, or the same as in Germany. At no time before 1907 was the number ever below 900,000 and before 1907 never below 800,000. The average has dropped to 770,000.

The number of marriages in 1912 was 311,829. This exceeds the average for the last five years and is surpassed by only a few other countries when the populations are taken into consideration. The increased facilities for securing divorce helped to increase the marriage rate, but the birth rate did not go up proportionately. The divorces numbered 14,600 during the year.

Vital statistics are of special interest at the present time as they are the fundamental cause of the necessity for the three year period of military service. M. Bertillon prophesies that four years service must come next and then five years unless more children are born.
